MAUDSLAY MUSTANG

The AEC Mustang was announced in 1956 to be built at the former Maudslay works. This twin-steering six wheel 'Chinese Six' model was rated for 18 tons gross weight. The Mustang achieved some popularity as general haulage flats, tankers, box vans and tippers.

BEAST OF BURDEN

Negotiating an incline on the old A1 at Felton Peth, heading for County Durham, this Leyland Octopus cattle transporter battles the winter weather. Named after its wheel layout the 22-ton four-axle rigid was developed to compete with similar offerings from Foden, AEC and ERF.

HART'S HYBRID

Not content with what lorry manufacturers had on offer in the 1950s, this Coppull-based haulier constructed a series of fascinating one-off hybrids. Seen in the Nottingham area during the 1960s, this handsome Atkinson chassis had a Longwell Green cab, a Leyland engine and a Fuller five-speed gearbox.

TOP OF THE RANGE

The 32:Four, with the Motor Panels steel cab, was the heaviest of the Seddon tractor unit range from the late 1960s and had a choice of Gardner or Rolls Royce power units. The surge in tractor unit demand coincided with a move away from rigid eight-wheel production.

TRUSTY EIGHT WHEELERS
 The first 8 wheelers to carry the famous Rugby Portland Cement livery were nine Thornycroft Trusty PK/QR 6 models. Able to carry a fifteen ton load of cement, well loved by their drivers and a delight to drive, they gave nearly ten years of faithful service with no trouble.

OLD KING COAL

For many years the railways had a virtual monopoly on the bulk transport of coal, but road haulage offered a more flexible alternative. This 1948 Maudslay articulated lorry, with AE engine and four-in-line trailer, is typical of the vehicles used for this work.
